The works of Durham-based sculptural artist Eliza Redmann are uniquely informed by a car crash and traumatic brain injury which interrupted her career as an architectural designer. Redmann has used art to reinvent herself and create new meaning for her life.

Simplicity is both the constraint and the strength of Eliza Redmann's brand, Folded Poetry. The bedrock of Folded Poetry is the use of a small number of simple forms which can be arranged to create complex geometries. These geometries are inspired by persistent visual disturbances caused by her traumatic brain injury and challenge the viewer to perceive outside of what is normal or traditional, just as she must now live, adapt, and navigate the world in new ways.

Drawing upon her architectural training and skills in craft and construction, Redmann has brought her work to a large scale through the creation of light-reflecting sculptures. She has pioneered creations of 'acoustical art' pieces - works which are both beautiful and serve to make spaces more quiet and accessible for individuals such as herself who struggle with auditory overwhelm. Committed to exploration, Redmann's work pushes beyond framed pieces of art and navigates where aesthetics meet functionality.
